As the days get shorter, it's crucial to raise awareness about the impact of seasonal changes on mental health during Seasonal Depression Awareness Month. Many struggle with heightened emotional challenges during this season called Seasonal Affective Disorder (SAD).

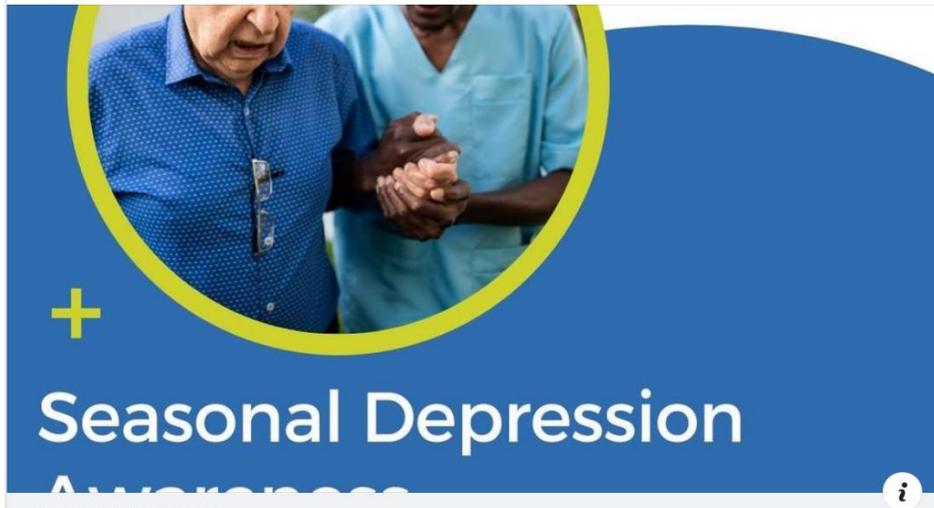

This is common in regions with harsher winters, but it does affect individuals of all ages, with older adults at a higher risk due to biochemical imbalance in the brain. The lack of daytime can cause:

- Oversleeping
- Limited mobility
- Lack of social support
- Withdrawals from friends or relatives
- Fatigue
- Depression

Some ways to combat SAD is to do light therapy, engage in healthy social interactions and therapy.

Let's support each other through understanding, empathy and open conversations.
