

Purdue University Northwest Pioneer Published Photography

Oct. 7, 2020

Many of PNW's once-full lecture halls are not being used this semester. Those that are have been equipped to encourage social distancing.

This computer station is unavailable to promote social distancing between students using campus resources. CDC guidelines to social distance has forced PNW staff to block off several workstations and seating areas and remain healthy, drastically reducing the number of computers and resources available to students.

The Hammond parking lot is empty during the day. Typically the mid-day rush of students coming to and from classes would be seen flowing through the lot, but COVID has pushed PNW to online classes and reduced the number of students on campus.

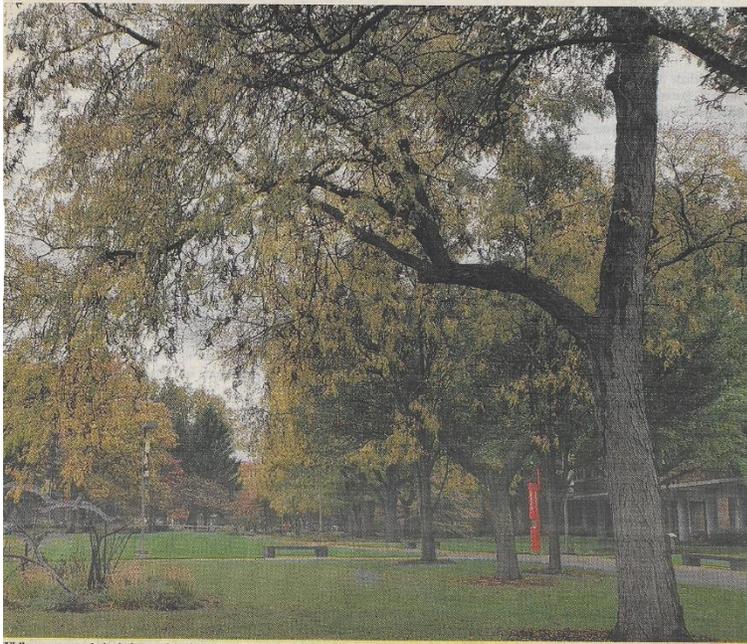

Hessville Auto Sales's owner, Kevin Hutt, says that since the pandemic, he's seen increased sales of used cars. People looking to save money have opted for his inventory rather than buying new. Source: Shannon Yardley

Students use the cafeteria to catch up on class work while masked and socially distanced. Photos by Shannon Yardley

Published October 28, 2020

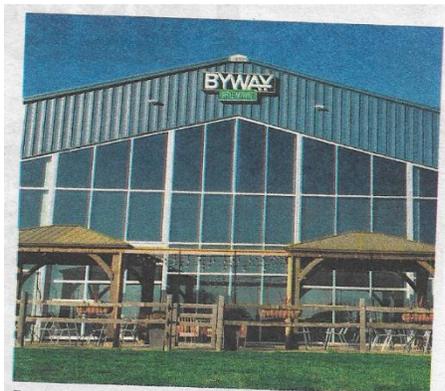

While many people look forward to fall colors, they signal a seasonal change that some students worry may bring more isolation that complicates seasonal anxiety and depression that already poses problems for a significant number of students. Photo by Shannon Yardley

Published November 18, 2020

As Thanksgiving approaches the campus scenery is changing to match the season. Students wonder how holiday get-togethers are going to be different this year as they find ways to connect with friends, family and loved ones in an environment that has imposed COVID-19 restrictions. Photo by Shannon Yardley

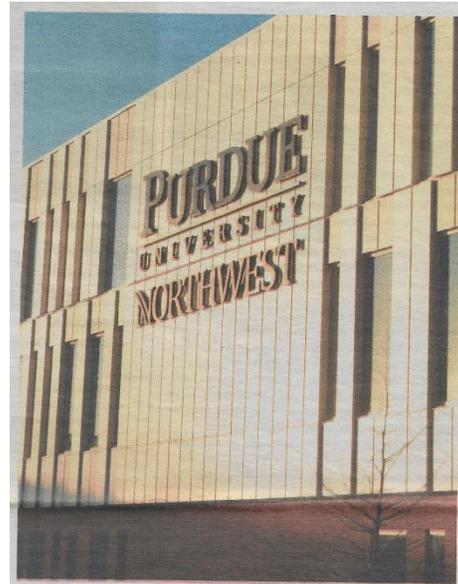

Byway Brewing, located only blocks from the Hammond campus, is the destination for an on-site tasting for the Sales and Service Beverage Operations class. Photo by Shannon Yardley

Published December 9, 2020

As COVID-19 defines a new normal, dramatic changes are likely in the workplace. PNW's Bioscience Innovation Building's state-of-the-art equipment helps train nurses to deal with challenges they will face tomorrow. Photo by Shannon Yardley

More than 1,000 students poised to complete their studies at PNW are taking their last look at the campus. Despite concerns about COVID-19 and their job and continuing education prospects, students remain optimistic about the future. Photo by Pioneer staff

Published February 12, 2021

8

Feb. 12, 2021

Men's hockey recently played Concordia Wisconsin and lost 4-3. The team is in its second season at PNW and currently has a record of 1-2. Junior forward and captain Cole Bockoc (right) skates down the ice to follow through with an offensive play. After playing his first season for Trine University, Bockoc transferred to PNW and said he felt he found his home. Photos by Shannon Yardley.

Faculty, staff and Leo the Lion show their support the only way they can under GLIAC COVID rules, by buying fan cutouts that are positioned at home games where fans cannot attend. Photo by Shannon Yardley.

Published May 5, 2021

A Westville campus committee has submitted several recommendations to make the campus more responsive to the surrounding community, while distinguishing it from the Hammond campus, (Photo by Shannon Yardley)

After a year of review, a multi-disciplinary committee has submitted several recommendations to restore the luster of the Westville campus, which critics say has suffered setbacks since it was combined with the Calumet campus. (Photo by Shannon Yardley)